Excerpt: .and pathetic gathering of frail humanity, extends a shielding arm over some two or three. Weighed down by helplessness and shame, these joyless creatures are not scurrying through the sand, or blithely plashing in the breakers. The gaiety of healthy boyhood is denied to them. Their drooping attitudes are inert, morose, and plaintive, while, as it were infected by the agony and pity of it all. the color of the sea is leaden, and the sun throws out no cheerful and invigorating radiance, but is merely sultry. 1 This picture, which hung in the Sunday-school room of the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, New York City, was kindly lent to the Hispanic Society of America for exhibition, as illustrating a distinct type of mastery, by the courtesy of its owner, John E. Berwind. Esq., and of the Rector, the Rev....
